Who goes to the BURFORD BRIDGE HOTEL Box Hill on Saturdays?

EVERYONE—IT'S THE PLACE

There's a dinner and dance in the 17th Century Tithe Barn every Saturday night. Two bands keep the party going from 8.00 p.m. to 1.00 a.m. and such stars as Lance Percival, Dick Emery and Jon Pertwee appear in the Cabaret. Only 40 minutes from town—and the price is 2 gns including the four-course dinner.

If you want to make a weekend of it you can arrive Saturday afternoon, go to the dinner dance in the evening, stay the night, enjoy a blissful breakfast in bed on Sunday morning and lunch at the hotel—all for 5 gns.

Or take advantage of our voucher scheme which enables you to lunch at any Trust House Hotel on your way home. Telephone: Dorking 4561 to make your reservation.

GABY VARGAS (above), Showboat, Lyons Corner House, Strand WC 2 (WHI 2781). Described as eccentric on and off stage, Gaby Vargas is now leading lady in the Lyons cabaret venture. In her sophisticated, off-beat way, she has similarities to the late Kay Kendall

DICKIE HENDERSON (above), Savoy, WC 2 (TEM 4343). One of those tripartite adventurers who conquered despite a heavy family precedent. He dances, of course and flicks you back to the 30s with a tap of his cane. He sings, of course, and produces a noted line in impersonation. He jokes, too, with a brisk patter

JOAN TURNER (left), Celebrite Restaurant, 17 New Bond St, W 1 (HYD 7636). That opera is basically funny is the principle behind Joan Turner's act; she started out as a proper opera singer, found herself giggling at the wrong moments, so turned to cabaret

AL BURNETT (right), The Stork Room, 99 Regent St, W 1 (REG 3686). He owns four of London's most popular night spots, but claims to enjoy being in on the act most. Speciality is using old material and the audiences love it, like children hearing fables for the 100th time

THE MAC 4 (above), Pigali, 196 Piccadilly, W 1 (REG 6422). One of the good things about full-scale revue such as Piccadilly Night Out is that there are a number of acts to watch. Apart from Mike and Bernie Winter who top the bill, there are the Mac 4, an engaging quartet of young men who sing, dance and somehow manage to play a dozen instruments between them. The lead, Ronny Monroe, was discovered singing at a holiday camp. Later he formed his group and they became resident performers on cruise liners. This is their first major West End appearance

42s 6d set dinner. Resident Calypso band. Roof garden with bar and casino on ground floor

Villa Dei Cesari, 135 Grosvenor Rd, SW 1 (TAT 7453/VIC 9872). Open every day except Mon 7.30 p m-2.30 a m. Also Sun lunch. One of the best river views in London. Speciality Roman food. Dinner for two about £5-£6. Full wine list, carafes from 19s 6d. Dancing to 2 bands until early hours. Dorothy Evans sings from 11.30 to 1 a m

DISCOTHEQUES

Informal nightclubs and restaurants with dancing, usually to gramophone records. Some discotheques feature musicians from time to time

Ad-Lib, Charles House, Leicester Sq, WC 2 (REG 0983). 10 p m-4 a m. Annual membership 5 guineas; overseas members 3 guineas. First drink and cover 25s, subsequent doubles 10s 6d. Short grills menu and Ad-Lib Titbits Tray 15s 6d-£1.

Entertainment: Dancing and discotheque; groups. Special entertainments this month

Marie Brizard Apry is today's cure for after-dinner angst* (high-powered people say so). It goes down slow, sweet and smooth. That's what Apry does. What lingers is the rich, ripe taste of apricots; the deep glow of a beautifully blended liqueur. Soothing after-dinner balm. And Marie Brizard Apry is a therapeutic 54/-, too.

*Anxiety—caused by a subconscious awareness of a lack of Apry.

PARTY PIECES

There is no organization in London that actually hires out guests for a party, though there used to be! But here are some hire firms, organizations, prop shops and people to get in touch with if you are planning to hold a party that your guests will remember. Also some ideas that have been tried and tested if you want to give a party outside your home

LIVE MUSIC

Hire a pop group by ringing Peter Harrison Star Attractions Ltd, 7 Archer St, W 1 (GER 4000), who claim they can get most groups (except the Beatles and the Rolling Stones). Five-piece group (lead guitar, bass guitar, organ, drums and lead singer) from 15 guineas. The more pop the group, the higher the fee. Small jazz groups or dance orchestras also available. They prefer good notice, but can usually help out last-minute callers from Robert Morrison, 3 West Eaton Pl, SW 1 (BEL 4851). You get hi-fi amplification of properly programmed records and continuous music because there are two turntables. Hire charge is 35 guineas for six hours of music, equipment installed before party starts and removed at end - not later than 4 a.m. Supply a man and a girl to operate it, who bring along about 300 singles and 80 LPs. Minimum notice of 24 hours. (Can do at 3 hours notice if not booked) can be hired from Strand Electric and Engineering Co, 271 Kennington Lane, SE 11 (REL 7811). Floodlights cost from 8s 9d a week, spotlights from 18s 3d. Will deliver free within 1 mile radius of West End and like to have an official order well in advance

LIGHTING

Impossibles Ltd

(Subscription 1 guinea a year). 13a Pall Mall, SW 1 (WHI 1771) will try and find a hall for a party. In fact, they'll try and find out anything for you if you become a member can be hired from John Trapp, 15 The Broadway, N 8 (MOU 1183). An upright can cost from £6 a day or grand piano from £8, but it depends a lot on where you live and on which floor. They like to have about seven days notice, and send their account afterwards (no deposit required)

can be hired (usually free of charge) from the off-licence where you buy your drinks is usually a problem at parties... Ice Cubes Ltd, 209 Clarendon Rd, W 11 (BAY 8303) will deliver cubes in plastic bags at 6d lb. or 'cooling ice' in larger chunks. Will also loan you insulated boxes for 5s. For a good party you need about 1 lb. ice per person - or 1½ lb. for Americans. No charge for delivery which can be until 7 p.m.

Pub Crawl by Bus

you can hire a coach that holds up to 52 people from Capital Coaches Ltd, 1 Hanover St, W 1 (REG 4987). They charge 3 guineas per head, including drinks at four pubs (they usually call at the Victoria Tavern, Strathearn Place, The Sherlock Holmes, Northumberland Avenue, the George at Southwark and Dirty Dick's at Shoreditch... but you can change the pubs if you'd rather go somewhere else). Charge also includes stopping at Tubby Isaac's East End jellied eel stall for shell fish, whelks or eels, coffee and hamburgers. Trip lasts about four hours

J & M Macdonald LIMITED, EDINBURGH

can be hired from the Old Times Furnishing Co, 135 Lower Richmond Rd, SW 15 (PUT 3551). You can get anything from mundane folding chairs (2s 6d day) to a hall porter's chair which looks like a sentry box . . . which might help to frighten off gate-crashers. They can, they say, supply any period or style of furniture, Moorish furniture, Burmese furniture . . . have been collecting pieces for over 75 years and Mr Fred Tyler will be pleased to help anything from a baby elephant to a barrel organ can be hired from Barnum's Carnival Novelties, 67 Hammersmith Rd, W 14 (FUL 4440). Their enormous catalogue (which they'll send post free) is enough to inspire you into giving a party even if you didn't intend to (3 pages devoted to false noses and face masks; 17 different kinds of comic false moustaches). If you want something out of the extra-ordinary, they will try their best to get it for you. Can also arrange for conjuring shows, Punch and Judy shows and will supply donkeys for children's parties from Juke Box, 173 Wardour St, W 1 (REG 2525). Will be delivered, installed and collected for 12 guineas. Carry 100 selections including top 30 pops and will do best to pick out any records you specially want (including classics). Week's notice preferred but they can usually cope inside 24 hours. Extension speakers (1 guinea per room) also supplied

Props, Novelties

Waiters, Waitresses, Butlers and Barmen

can be hired through the Mayfair Catering Co Ltd, 34 North Row, W 1 (MAY 0175) who will also hire out anything from a coffee spoon to a raised dais. A waitress will charge from about 3 guineas but it all depends on her duties and how long your party lasts. A barman will charge can be put in the artistic hands of Bill and Sally Cook, 26 Fernshaw Rd, SW 10 (FLA 0781) who can make a room/house as kooky or crazy as you like. They'll supply lots of ideas, and can make all sorts of 'exotica' out of bits of paper and the like. They're good at doing decorations for children's parties too can be hired by the day from Magnagraph, 1 Hanway Pl, W 1 (LAN 2156). Tape recorders cost from 12s 6d day or 2 guineas week; amplifiers £1 day and record players 12s 6d day. Collect and deliver yourself. Deposit from £5 for those who want to make the grand entrance. Twentieth Century Fur Hirers Ltd, 10 Princes St, W 1 (MAY 2711) can loan you anything from a white fox stole (4 guineas per day) to a silver grey mink (£18 per day)

Tape Recorders, Record Players, Amplifiers, Speakers, etc.

Marquees, Awnings, Dance Floors, Chairs, Tables, Garden Furniture

can be hired from John Edgington and Co Ltd, 50-52 Neate St, SE 5 (ROD 7055). If the query is for something a little complicated, a representative will call and quote Christmas double!

The look on children's faces, the fairy lights and tinsel trees, the family reunions, the food, the presents . . . Christmas is a special time—matched by special issues of The Illustrated London News and Holly Leaves. These two sumptuous numbers are full of colour and features that sum up Christmas in Britain. Every member of the family will enjoy reading them.

BUY THEM NOW 5/- EACH AT YOUR LOCAL NEWSAGENT

The Illustrated London News Christmas Number is not just a magazine made to look seasonal. It's a work of art in itself. It includes 24 pages of superlative colour, together with a front cover reproducing Canaletto's breathtaking painting of Westminster Abbey. The latter ties in with a feature written to mark the Abbey's 900th anniversary. Then there will be over seven pages of colour on Royalty as artists, with paintings by Queen Victoria, the daughters of George III, and the Duchesses of Kent and Gloucester; a feature on how artists over the centuries have painted the River Thames; colour features on the Iranian Crown Jewels and animals of the Antarctic.

Holly Leaves will have something to interest you whoever you are. In colour, there's a decorative arrangement of the Zodiac; two pages of specially commissioned paintings of pheasants, by Dr. Eric Ennion; a picture by Peter Biegel, the sporting artist, of the ride home after a day's hunting; a feature on Sussex church porches, and paintings of Joan of Arc, Herbertonford village in Devon, and the tinsel glamour of the Punch and Judy show. Black and white features include illustrated articles on the Witches of the North Country, Gamekeepers of the old days, Balloons and Airships, Engraved Glassware from the fourteenth to the nineteenth centuries, Thatching in East Anglia—and a Countryman's Quiz.

A vivid description, by a Past President, of the most famous debating society in the world through its hundred and forty years of existence. This political nursery of future Prime Ministers and Cabinet Ministers had many setbacks and revivals in the period from the exclusive and aristocratic days of the early 19th century down to the present day, and the book is crowded with famous names.

Not much bottle at the Beat Ball by Jane Wilson

"Get Alive '65 - Join The Jet Set and Go-Go-Go with AFO at the Woodstock Hotel, North Cheam" said the poster on the hoarding. There being no jets, as yet, to North Cheam you have to go-go-go Cheamwards with London Transport. Several hours later I was half-alive '65 outside a large fairy-lit roadhouse, an oasis in a desert of semi-detacheds. In the entrance to the dancehall adjoining the pub there stood a faded Ronald Colman in a dinner jacket, and a notice announcing "Destination Big Beat All The Way - Wherever You Go It's AFO Now Operating in Four Counties." Ronald Colman made a karate movement in my direction. "Sorry darlin' - you can't go in. No trousers." I protested - my trousers were clean, decent, paid for, and miles from home. "Sorry mate. It's AFO rules. We sent a girl back to Dorkin' last night for a skirt." AFO appeared at that moment in the person of Arthur Forrest (Organization) wearing a maroon tuxedo.

"Oh dear me no! If I let you in like that all the girls will be on to me in a minute. We don't allow trousers or white knee socks." White knee socks? It was not that he believed such garments had any inherent tendency to corrupt and deprave. "They just cause bother, mate. It's not worth our while. We've got a really nice crowd up here, you know. No long hair or jeans and no fights or anything like that. You'll have to get down to Wimbledon for that lot." I remarked that it was too late to get down to Wimbledon for that lot now. Shouts of "Yeah! ROCKER!" came from the doorway of the dancehall. Mr Forrest led me into a darkened bar. "Look - I'll tell you. The boys have got to look respectable too. We ban them for three months if they undo their collar button. Had a lad up here last week slapped his girl friend's face right up in front of the bandstand. Gave him the old heave-ho, and what we call the 'eighty year ban.' He came in here a couple of days later and said to me 'That's a nice American car you got out there - pity about the scratch on the wing. I'll give you a fifty quid respray for nix if you'll lift that ban.'" Mr Forrest twinkled merrily at me. "Come in here Stan! Stan here's our floor manager and club Lover. The girls all scream after him you know." "Only when I get them out in the car" said Stan, smoothing down his quiff. "You know what AFO stands for?" said Mr Forrest elbowing me in the ribs. "Artistic Flirting Organization! How about that then?" He slipped sideways off his barstool. "Seriously though, we have a very good reputation round here, specially with the parents and the local police."

'The girls dance together mostly, standing in circles and doing something which looks as though they are skiing vigorously on the spot'

I imagined the parents secure at home in the knowledge that their sons were not undoing their buttons and their daughters were not wearing knee socks. Mr Forrest was clearly all set to tell me about the reputation of the AFO with the local clergy, parish council, and health inspectors. But it was time to go. Advising him to get in a stock of spare skirts for hire to trousered girls from Dorking, I went out past notices announcing dates for groups such as "The Who'd A Thot It", and "The 4 Inches." The "Battle of The Groups Night" was to be judged by Geoffrey Frost of Sound Techniques Studios, and Anthony Kemp, editor of The Music and Record Industries Year Book.

"No more buses now, love" said two youths in a car. "Were you up the Woodstock then? Not much bottle there, is it? You want to get down to the Orchid Ballroom at Purley. That's a real ballroom - a ballroom and a half. The Gents is all done up like a ship. The mirrors are all portholes and that, and there's a man there who gives you an electric razor as you go in - if you want one that is. All the doors open automatically. Worth going up there it is, just to see it all." I now knew that Wimbledon was good for fights, Purley for portholes, and that trousers caused "bother."

There should be a banner outside the dancehall at Purley - 'See The Orchid Ballroom And Die.' Imagine a gigantic Golden Egg Restaurant with a dance floor and overall space to accommodate three thousand people. Suspended from the 50 foot ceiling are illuminations of the sort provided at Christmastime by the store-owners of Regent Street. Saturday Night is Palais Nite – and three thousand 8s makes £1,200. But this was Monday Nite and it was 3s for “Off The Record” with continuous pop music from 7.30 to 11 p.m. Inside, past Gentlemen’s Cloaks and Stagroom is La Fiesta where swaying life-size plastic palm trees and voodoo masks surround customers for Fish and Chix – 4s per portion. Every wall has a row of stained Perspex fake windows lit from behind and every window has a window box full of plastic flowers which are lit by coloured light bulbs inside each bloom. Upstairs, past bamboo-painted doors marked “Strictly Private,” and you are on the threshold of Ye Olde Inne – as is also one complete suit of knight’s armour. Above the bar in elaborate Gothic lettering there is a warning “By Law You Are Not Allowed To Drink Alcohol If You Are Under 18.”

Serious drinking is done at two 30 ft. bars downstairs, but there is also a Wine Bar with a defunct waterfall and a dry pool full of cigarette packets. Unless you want to sit on a barrel and have a Tio Pepe or Amontillado sherry, you should plunge into a dark corridor which runs along behind the bandstand and emerges by a telephone booth. This is got up to look like a Parisian kiosk, and is decorated with Brooke Bond Twist & Beat Championship posters. Next to the Pagoda Handbag Depository is the Blue Grotto, which is very blue, very cold, and a bit grotty. The cement stalactites are not convincing. They surround a large EXIT sign and hang above a glass dome full of Koo Pure Pineapple Juice.

The pièce de résistance is the Revolving Lager Bar. I had a drink there with Angela from Streatham. Angela usually goes to the Locarno. “It’s nice here for a change, but they’re more friendly really at the Locarno. As long as you’re alright – I mean not really horrible looking – you’re sure to get a fellow there who’ll buy you drinks and that. But there was a man stabbed and thrown over the balcony there a few months ago.” She opened her eyes very wide. “Come-to-bed eyes” shouts a boy on the other side of the bar. The barman approaches. “Well. You’re a double vodka type, and she’s a hot rum. Sorry there’s only lager.” I begin to get used to whizzing round and round with my glass of blood (lager and blackcurrant). Suddenly one of my ear-rings is removed from behind with a swift, painful jerk – like a nurse removing sticking plaster. David Jones of West Croydon grins and puts the ear-ring on his key-ring. Suspecting that this may be an initial move in some sort of Purley courtship ritual I engage him for a few moments in idle conversation about the real and sentimental value of ear-rings in general and of this one in particular. I discover that Mr Jones wishes to try on the ear-ring in the gentlemen’s stagroom, and may be prepared to return it to me thereafter. He returns with Terry Bones – brother of the chief T-Bone. The ear-ring did not suit either of them, so he gives it back – “It’s a very hard area round here darlin,’ and you’ve got to screw your loaf.” Which, being translated, after some thought by Mr Jones, means “WATCH OUT.” Screwing their loves all round the ballroom are thirty assorted bouncers. They are intimidatingly large, but wear dinner jackets and are referred to, in Mecca-ese, as “supervisors.” But there is rarely any trouble. The boys and the girls are very impressed by the surreal exoticism of their surroundings. Everyone walks about in a happy daze of dreams-of-affluence-fulfilled. Dancers and drinkers walk through the automatic doors with dignity, and sit beneath the plastic palm-trees in subdued groups.

The Orchid Ballroom is Mecca’s ultimate and golden showplace. The Royal at Tottenham is one of their workaday models. It has a New World Bar, and a Little Shop where you can buy Steady Rings for 25s, and musical cigarette boxes with pop-up ballerinas inside. But instead of Fish and Chix there are Filled Rolls (Various), and the Wine Bar is closed during the week. The one enlivening extravaganza is the ladies cloakroom – The Palace of Beauty – For London’s Loveliest Ladies. Here there are 55 individual mirrors and dressing tables, Regency striped wallpaper, and machines which give you a sixpenny burst of half-a-dozen expensive perfumes. But the edge is taken off the elegance by a large, uncompromising notice which says NO TICKET – NO COAT, and by the despairing cry of London’s Loveliest “Just look at my HAIR, Carol! Lend us your comb.” Patrons of the Royal are very young – some of the girls looked, on close inspection, as if they were no more than 13 or 14. Since the In-Betweens Dance on Saturday afternoons caters only for the seven to 12 year-olds, presumably anyone older than 12 is old enough. The principle occupation of the evening is not drinking, or talking, or even dancing – except ostensibly. The boys and girls go simply to look at one another. The girls dance together mostly, standing in circles and doing something which looks as though they are skiing vigorously on the spot. The boys watch this attentively, shuffling their feet and muttering in small groups. “By the time you’ve plucked up courage to ask someone, it’s time to get your coat.” Tom, a carpenter from Islington shouted this in my ear from a range of one and a half inches. He then propelled me round the floor in ever-decreasing circles. “No good messing about, love – I can’t dance. They find out anyway as soon as you get them on the floor.” Having got that over, he became chatty and sociable. “Where do you live then? Maybe I’ll come over one evening and put some shelves up in your bedroom?”

Due North-West from Tottenham is the Starlite Ballroom, Greenford. The kids here are much older, and are frighteningly smooth, cool, and well-dressed. “Friday Nite Is Rave Nite – Wear All Your Mod Gear.” Friday night is an exception because the dancers from Ready Steady Go come over to the club in coaches after the show. Normally it’s “Collars and Ties – No Jeans or Leathers – No Girls in Trousers – No Unusual Dress.” Regretting only that I was not in full evening dress and accompanied by a Scotsman in a kilt and a cavalry officer in dress uniform, I joined the queue outside, which was being godlessly entertained by a man with a placard announcing “Christ Came Into The World To Save Sinners.” Peter Lindsay, who began as a promoter of village hall hops, now owns this ballroom and four others as far afield as Faversham and High Wycombe. “Give him another five years and he’ll have Charles Clore’s head on his watch chain” said bouncer and film stunt man Gary Davis. He turned his broken nose into profile beside a photograph of himself playing a boxer in the film Panic. “Of course we don’t call this a dancehall really. It’s an Entertainment Centre.” Mr Lindsay hires groups like the Graham Bond Organization, and Zoot Money and the Big Roll Band at weekends, but during the week he has bingo, whist, and socials.

This evening The Birds and The Sons of Fred were playing. The latter were not a complete success. “Terrible little Beatle people,” said the boy on my left, turning away in obvious abdominal pain. “That one looks like Sandie Shaw in drag.” “Better” said the boy on my right. The Birds were more popular – “But Mick Jagger should have taken out a bloody patent.” The Starlite is sophisticated in decor, compared to the Meccas. It has low ceilings, lurid abstract murals, a lot of shiny black surfaces, and small sofas arranged in groups. It is also comparatively small. You have to queue for everything – to get in, to hand in your coat, to use a mirror, a drink, or a space on the floor. Only the bar is air-conditioned, and it prospers as a result. Lager and lime, and cider, are served in beer mugs to nonchalant 16 year-olds at the Teen Bar. The cider is apple juice and the lager is less than two per cent proof – but they don’t know this and become noticeably excitable as the evening progresses. Jammed together near the bandstand it is impossible not to eavesdrop. “I’ve got a friend who could help you, you know. She’s a psycho-analyst. She done it in three months – during the summer like.” Details of this crash-course were drowned out by a burst of the reverberating blood music of Get Offa My Cloud.

I heard this song over and over again, but at The Tiger’s Head, Catford, George Bean and The Runners had a most original repertoire including a number which began "Wo Yeah! Do You Wanna A Bunk-Up, Little Girl?" The Tiger's Head dancehall is not a place to be entered lightly, or left easily once something like 400 people have packed themselves into it. Beer is served in bottles from a long bar. You are supplied with one glass only at the beginning of the evening. Wick-er baskets at strategic points around the hall are provided for disposal of empties. When the baskets are full, bottles are ground underfoot so that at the end of the evening the whole floor glitters with fragments of glass. On Friday night the atmosphere is uninhibited after about 10 o'clock and some resourcefulness is necessary to deal with sudden Bacchanalian advances. "Come here darlin'. I know stork from butter." There are four bouncers, two of whom stand on chairs to make sure that everyone remains reasonably vertical, and two of whom stand at the door continually issuing and collecting pass-outs for the men's

'Just look at my HAIR, Carol!
Lend us your comb'

'We don't allow trousers...
They just cause bother, mate. It's not worth our while'

lavatory which is outside the hall. "There could be blue murder in there by the bar, but we've only got to go in towards them and that's enough, see."

An hour and a half after the dance began there are only 38 girls dancing together and no boys at all. The cloakroom is packed with girls depressed by the lack of heterosexual integration outside. As is usual on such occasions, they are doing a little quiet bitching. "Did you see her then? She does show him up, you know. She had on one of those mauve op-art dresses that they've got up the Junction." Mr Bean and his Runners explained the situation to me thus: "The thing is to be cool. You musn't dance much, just a shuffle in the last few numbers. And you musn't look as though you're enjoying yourself. It is very bad here though. I reckon they come specially to have a miserable time. The more miserable they can get, the better evening they think they've had." Mr Bean, who works during the day in an advertising agency, has very relaxed eyelids and is a dab hand with the tambourine. His side-burns come down almost to his jaw, and the slits at the sides of his jacket come up almost to his armpits. His hair is long but straight, as is that of his lead guitarist Tony Catchpole - an ex-employee of the Epstein Organization. But the other three members of the group have disastrously luxuriant curly hair, and nothing looks odder than a long curly fringe. "They look like crinkle-cut chips" observed the man who knew stork from butter. The group is paid £15 for the whole evening with one break in the middle. Four hundred admission tickets at 5s each makes £100. Overheads are minimal and a great deal of drink is sold. But the supply of pop groups exceeds demand. "There's so many groups it's getting ridiculous. And most of them are no use at all" said the manager. "We've had three in already this evening looking for work."

Saturday night at the Wimbledon Palais de Dance is Radio London Night or Big L Night. Several groups appear on this show for nothing because they want the publicity. "Appear" is the operative word here - they usually do no more than mime to their latest record. The Wimbledon Palais is a curious building which looks as though it should have been used for some important military purpose during the last war, or as though it was originally designed as a Zeppelin hangar. The disc jockey is one Ed Stewart - frenetic in beard, mid-Atlantic accent, horn rimmed spectacles and what appears to be a sawn-off belted silk dressing gown.

Nobody dances much. The more orderly and clubbable members of the crowd stand in a packed mass in front of the bandstand and take part in various games organized by Mr Stewart: e.g. Four boys sit on chairs with bibs round their necks while four girls force a packet of crisps and a bottle of Seven Up down each of their throats as fast as they can. The four girls then come to the front of the stage, and the first to blow up a balloon until it pops wins an L.P. of Manfred Mann. "Shove it in, girls" cries the DJ, lolling against a hard-board partition. This cry is then taken up loudly and for several minutes in the bar and at the back of the ballroom. Mr Stewart bites his lip. The boys are a mixed bunch - anything from beards and sandals to modernism to Grievous Bodily Harm merchants with dog ends behind their ears. In the bar the head steward, Angus Macdonald from Edinburgh, casts an experienced eye on the scene. "The thing to do is to get up near to the bar and listen. Then you just warn them before any trouble can begin." "No you don't mate - you give 'em one," objected a bystander who had seen Mr Macdonald in action. "Jock here is very rough on the punch-up lads. He's been up here for years and he's worth a bob or two to the Palais I can tell you." Mr Davis, the Palais' general manager, sits in a back office well out of harm's way, and looks like an abnormally worried bank manager. He was evasive about the tie-up with Radio London. No, the pirates did not hire the Palais. Did the Palaishire them? "That's rather private isn't it?"

The girls at Wimbledon are of two sorts - smallish with flat-topped hairstyles, tight sweaters, surprisingly long skirts and lowheeled shoes, or taller, thinner, and more West-End-smart with false eyelashes and amazingly intricate hairstyles. All of them have a marvellously brash, brassy and self-possessed manner. I wanted to talk for a moment to Janet and Barbara, two almost identical, flat-haired sisters from Morden. Aged 16 and 17, they turned four coldly glittering green eyes on me and snapped. "You'll have to hurry up then because we're going now. We're going all-night bowling with two fellas we just met. We always stay out Saturday nights. We used to go up the West End but it's not with it anymore. The clubs are too small and too dear. This place is with-it and so's the Streatham Locarno. We go there Tuesdays. 'Bye.'" They met their escorts for the night at the 'Dog and Onions' stand outside the ballroom. The four all-night bowlers strolled away to the South Merton Board Mills, and along the banks of the sluggish River Wandle where it carries dollops of detergent foam down to the Thames.

Tito Gobbi flew in from Rome with his usual "boy's" smile, a smile which curves a little more up one side of his face than the other. London first knew that smile during the late 1940s when the Romantic Italian Baritone, as he was billed, so packed the Albert Hall for one of his recitals that seating had to be taken out of the arena as if for a Prom.

He is now a grandfather of two-and-a-half years' standing and in process of re-phasing a career that started when, at 21, he sang the grizzled Elder Germont (La Traviata) at the Adriano, Rome. In future he is going to stage operas as well as sing in them. As producer he makes his world début with Verdi's Simon Boccanegra at Covent Garden, while singing the name part at six performances, the first of them on Wednesday 1 December.

Tito Gobbi was 50 last month. As his recent Scarpias have proved, his voice and acting still galvanize great theatres. But at 50 the velvet and the volume begin to go from any voice. Gobbi's new phase as singer-cum-producer must in the course of nature be followed sooner or later by a last chapter as producer-cum-teacher and operatic elder statesman. In twenty-eight years he has sung 99 baritone leads on the stage and hopes before long to make Escamillo (Carmen) his hundredth. So far he has sung this part only in films and on American television.

While he was on his way to the London Opera Centre, once a super-cinema (the Troxy), Covent Garden's workshop in the Commercial Road, East End, for the first of 20 or 30 rehearsal sessions, somebody said to Gobbi: "Best of luck as a producer, Tito. But I hope we'll be hearing you for another 10 years at least".

"If I can't sing for another 10 years", laughed Gobbi, "maybe I shall decide to sing for another 20".

Was there a rueful note here? Not in the least. Already he was bubbling over with creative ideas. That he should have charge of the new Boccanegra was agreed between him and Sir David Webster, head of the Royal Opera, three years ago. Having sung the part 200 times since his Boccanegra début in 1942 at the Reale, Rome, he already knew the Paive-Boïto libretto and Verdi's score by heart. This I mean literally. He could, after a fashion, sing any one of the other five main rôles and any of the chorus parts. He knew the orchestral parts in detail also.

But this wasn't enough. Something over 18 months ago he began supplementary studies of the opera's historical background in libraries from Rome and London to the University of California. A longish season at the San Francisco opera left him with his days free. Most mornings he taxied to the university library, sometimes with his wife, Tilde, as co-researcher, and spent engrossed hours annotating from a specialist collection on the opera's time and place: 14th-century Genoa.

He brought with him to the Troxy a briefcase bulging with photocopies of material, much of it in Latin, about the plebeian Boccanegra's naval campaigns against Mediterranean piracy, his services to the City State of Genoa and his election as Doge.

Soaking oneself in text and score and their historical sources is, he claims, a surer creative springboard than biting one's nails about what other producers have done. It is, in fact, the only way for Gobbi. He has never seen Simon Boccanegra from "in front". Indeed, he has never seen a complete opera in his life; only 16 bits of operas — one act of this, 10 minutes of that, 20 minutes of the other. Alike as singer and producer, he keeps away from the theatre for three reasons. First (he says) to retain his integrity as an individual artist. "Tito Gobbi is Tito Gobbi because he doesn't know other artists and is thus free from extraneous influences." Second, because he knows the singing parts so well, especially the difficult passages, where singers have to "climb, struggle and cling", that he would feel for them too much; a night at the opera would be misery. Third, because he doesn't want to be tainted by "tradition". "Tradition", he says, "is the cancer of the lyric stage. Every age has its own way of looking at an opera and acting and singing it. If one does Boccanegra in the traditional way one is at least 30 years behind the times. I brought myself up to date on Boccanegra by grubbing in libraries and going back six centuries".

In a lesser man this approach might have turned to pedantry. On the Troxy rehearsal floor, with the veteran Maestro de Fabritiis conducting from a deal table and a grand piano doing duty for the orchestra, history lessons became vibrant drama. The first three mornings and two afternoons were given over largely to the turbulent scene in the Doge's Council Chamber.

On the dogal throne sat John Shaw, of the Covent Garden resident company, who takes over the Boccanegra rôle from Gobbi at two performances. As the tenor, Renato Cioni (Gabriele), could not attend the second session, Gobbi, baritone though he is, took the tenor line himself in dialogue exchanges, even making a pass at B flat above the stave in Gabriele's "Pel cielo!" outburst. He showed everybody how to do everything: the dogal herald how to carry his trumpet, the captain of the dogal guard how to march on and off, everybody in sight how to draw swords and sheath them...

But it was his handling of the chorus in the crowd scenes that showed his method and mettle most strikingly. At first a discreet touch of flattery. After chousing offstage in the Prologue the townsfolk rush in to acclaim Boccanegra on his election as Doge. "What I want", Gobbi told them, "is a crowd. You are all artists. You know exactly what I want you to do. So I will not tell you how to stand and how to look". From that moment the chorus adored him. As the rehearsal went on he told them where to stand and how to look none the less. They didn't mind at all. On the third day he warned Stella Chitty, the stage manager, that he proposed to begin by talking to the chorus for an hour or so. Miss Chitty wondered whether it was wise for any singer with six performances fairly imminent to talk so much in one burst. Not to worry, said Gobbi. He would get all his talking out of the way during the first week. After that he would direct the rehearsals by glance and gesture only, thus resting his voice and saving it up.

In the event he talked for 50 minutes, knitting together and supplementing what he had previously told his singers in a fragmentary way. He told them of the Mediterranean as the centre of the 14th-century world and Italy as the centre of the Mediterranean, the umbilicum mundi; of Genoa's rise to maritime power and the sea as a Boccanegra "protagonist"; of the raw, rising plebeian faction and their ultimate victory over the patricians; of Boccanegra as a reconciler of classes, the first man with a vision of Italy United, a Garibaldi five centuries before his time. . . .

Then a signal to Maestro de Fabritiis. The rehearsal proper began. This time chorus and principals went like greyhounds through the entire Council Chamber scene with no halt to speak of. Never before has Covent Garden known so lengthily a run-through at so early a stage.

Gobbi is not the first opera-singer turned opera-producer. But Gobbi brings exceptional versatility to his twofold job. He is a qualified lawyer and a semi-qualified architect. He paints and sculpts, and has often said he could earn his living by either art. He reads widely and avidly — and thinks that manysidedness sharpens one's sense of lyric drama.

DAVID BAILEY IN ACTION

As seen by Gerald Scarfe. David Bailey's Box of Pin-Ups will be published on Thursday 2 December by Weidenfeld & Nicolson at three guineas. It's a boxed collection of separate portraits—you can pin up the ones you like, and throw the others away. Overleaf, one of the pin-ups—the Kray Brothers, with commentary by Francis Wyndham

The Kray brothers are an East End legend – their exploits have inspired almost as many stories (both false and true) as those of Frank and Jesse James. The Krays' headquarters are still at their mother's humble house in Vallance Road, Bethnal Green, which is now done up in Harrods style with oil paintings of Spanish dancers and guitar-shaped mirrors. Mrs Kray's father lives next door: Jimmy Lee, nearly ninety, and better known as the Cannonball Southpaw. Her eldest son, Charlie (centre in the photograph) is eight years older than the more famous twins, Reg (left) and Ron: these were born in 1933. They are now less identical than they were in the fabulous days when they could switch raincoats and confuse authority by impersonating each other. Ron is heavy (like the gold ring he wears) and taciturn, with occasional flashes of disconcerting humour. Reg speaks softly and has a slightly worried expression; he seems anxious to please. Both can be overwhelmingly hospitable. To be with them is to enter the atmosphere (laconic, lavish, dangerous) of an early Bogart movie, where life is reduced to its simplest terms and yet remains ambiguous.

Do they model themselves on such movies, or are they an unself-conscious continuation of what those movies were modelled on? 'The Krays are very down to earth', said a friend of theirs, former winner of three Lonsdale Belts. 'You might talk nice or you might talk East End, but if you're down to earth you get respect. Everybody respects the Krays.' The Cambridge Union once invited the twins to take part in a debate on the theme: The Law Is An Ass. They refused, for down to earth reasons. 'What's the point of talking about the law? You only get yourself all worked-up, and there's nothing you can do about it. Besides, we didn't know what questions they were going to ask us, did we?' The Kray clan is large, with connections throughout the sporting and show-business world.

Charlie's wife, Dolly, has two children; Reg recently married Frances, sister of his mate Frank Shae – Reg had known Frances since she was a child of fourteen wearing school uniform. ('The sun shines on the righteous', said Charlie cheerfully on Reg's wedding-day.) Ron is unmarried: 'I'm quite famous as a bachelor, aren't I?' Their various haunts reveal a fascinating cross-section of the London entertainment scene: from the spier at Walthamstow, where rummy is the favourite game, through the glossier atmosphere at Le Monde in Chelsea, to Soho nightclubs with names like El Moroocco, and back again to The Grave Maurice, a Whitechapel pub where they often hold court.

Photograph by John Carter

We got David Hockney out of bed at half-past ten in the morning to compose the titles for his latest series of prints (left), which will be part of his exhibition of paintings opening at Kasmin in Bond Street on 3 December. He appeared wearing smoked glasses and bright turquoise blue pyjamas styled like a judo kimono, disappeared briefly and reappeared wearing a white polo sweater, corduroys and large round black-rimmed spectacles of the kind you might buy at a joke shop. He later added a vivid blue corduroy cap which perfectly matched the pyjamas.

At a time when most artists are so little differentiated in manner and appearance that you could almost line them up and number them off in threes, Mr Hockney is a delightful eccentric, still staunchly trying to offer sartorial outrages in an age when there is practically no-one left to outrage. He lives in a large Victorian house in a seedy street in North Kensington with a group of friends who keep popping into his studio to borrow cigarettes. There is a large wooden Buddha, a photograph of Paul McCartney, a lot of ashtrays with advertisements on them and several rather battered pieces of furniture.

It was extremely important, he said, to get the wording of the titles absolutely right, so that everyone would understand that they were pictures of pictures, not just pictures, "just to make sure that you notice everything that you should notice."

"It's a kind of joke thing, a kind of home-made art collection with bits of everything in it, a nude, an abstract, a landscape and so on. I was working with a printer in Hollywood whose workshop was behind a framer's. He had all these marvellous frames in the window. I got interested in this trompe l'oeil thing—a picture of a thing within something else within something else."

Hockney, now 28, is a mild-mannered Yorkshireman whose blandness contrasts oddly with his bizarre exhibitionism. He spent three months in Hollywood on his last visit to America, and would quite like to live there.

"I can always work well there. I get more excited when the plane comes into Los Angeles airport than I have ever been anywhere else. When I come back to London I find myself painting pictures of California."

Like his dealer Kasmin (who is 30), Hockney barely looks out of his teens. "In California, I still have to prove my age to get a drink," he says. "One time we were there together, they refused to serve Kas in a bar until he had shown them his passport. He thought they were joking, but the barman said: 'Pay up, Mac, or get out!'"

An essentially sophisticated artist, he is slightly bemused by the attitude of some critics who seem to regard him as a sort of holy idiot.

"They say my drawing is childlike. Some of the drawing in my pictures is deliberately childlike, it's true, but anyone should know that it's done that way deliberately, for a reason. In other cases, I can't see that it's childlike at all."

PERSONAL COLUMN

In 1965, 1984 isn't horrifying any more

"A 40-year-old mother of two children collapsed and died while watching the TV horror play 1984..."

"Scores of angry television viewers phoned the Daily Mirror last night. 'Disgusting,' 'Horrible,' 'appalling,' they said."

"A member of the British Housewives' League said: 'The play was just sadistic and horrible. Sunday is the night you try to keep the whole family around you, but this Sunday they would have been better off out of the house.'"

"This weekend, the long-haired giants of Lime Grove excelled themselves..."

Rudolph Cartier's original television production of George Orwell's novel in 1954 really began what can now be recognized as a classic series of public rumpuses stretching through the Lady Chatterley trial and the David Frost shows to Mr Kenneth Tynan's well-publicized expletive, which have pushed forward the frontiers of public taste in almost all the arts and media of communication.

The new production of 1984 on BBC-2 this Sunday - "On Sunday of all days!" an angry lady wrote to one of the newspapers last time - seems unlikely to cause a comparable furore. Indeed, one of the problems this time has been to maintain the impact of the horror on the tougher sensibilities of the 1965 audience.

"You need to step the thing up a little bit," says Nigel Kneale, who has revised his own original adaptation for the current production. "The audience is more unshockable now. Last time, the audience thought that, if we showed violence, we were not commenting on it but approving it. Today, the audience is conditioned to accept satire."

David Buck will play Winston (Peter Cushing in 1954), Jane Morrow will play Julia (Yvonne Mitchell in 1954), and Joseph O'Connor will play

TORTURE SCENE, 1954: Peter Cushing (left) as Winston Smith and André Morel as O'Brien

O'Brien (André Morel in 1954).

Christopher Morahan, who has directed the new production, says that all explicit references to Socialism have been dropped and that Winston and Julia will be younger. In the original novel, the nuclear holocaust which preceded the totalitarian state was projected to take place in 1955. By the year 1984, the two lovers are too young to remember what life was like before the holocaust. As this has not taken place by 1965, they must now be portrayed as not older than their early 20s.

"In 1948," says Morahan, "Orwell wrote a lot about rationing, the greyness of life at that time. This is less relevant now and we've elided a lot of it. The main difference is that we have included much more of Orwell's argument. Kneale felt that the 1954 audience would not be able to accept some of its intricacies. They are more sophisticated now."

Orwell's vision was of human beings dehumanized by the omnipotent State. On Monday, the evening after 1984, a 25-minute film called Our Time (on Rediffusion) presents a more ordinary - and for that reason more convincing - picture of the dehumanizing process of industrial society.

The film was shot in and around the giant new office blocks and housing complexes of London, portraying a hygienic world of steel and plate-glass in which the individual is diminished to a mere adjunct of the machine.

Shots of ranks of teleprinter operators in the Esso building in Victoria Street, each in lonely communion with his machine, are followed by others of secretaries taking dictation from recording machines. Man speaks to machine and machine speaks to man. There is a chilling shot of a long, empty corridor in the Shell building on South Bank which might well have served for Orwell's Ministry of Truth.

It was made by two young film-makers, Anthony West and Caterina Arvat, who have formed their own company to produce short films (they dislike the term 'documentary' with its connotation of the explicit social realism of the 1930s). It has already been sold to several foreign networks.

West, the son of one of Baird's collaborators in the early development of television, studied film-making in Italy after leaving Cambridge. He directs. Caterina Arvat, who writes the scripts, has worked for several years in Italian films.

Our Time has no dialogue. It explores the pattern of life in the new buildings of London entirely in terms of its powerful imagery. Some people who have seen it feel that it is not savage enough. ("A good ordinary company film," one blithely unperceptive executive of Shell called it).

But West says: "If it were more openly polemical, it would be less effective. It's a pointless exercise to say that all modern life is bad. We like to observe things simply as they are."

A round peg in a square hole

Half-way down Kingsway, London's most original "prestige block" is at present under construction. It is called Magnate House and has a fine crenellated frontage, rather like a flat honeycomb, which produces some odd optical effects when you walk towards it or round the base. But the most unusual thing about it is simply that it is round.

In a world where primary shapes are hard to come by, it might seem odd that English architects have not even tried something like this a little sooner, and that town dwellers should go on being confined by endless repetitions of the square and the rectangle.

In spite of the example of some rather famous buildings in the past and some others a little more recent (the Guggenheim Museum, and Ocean City in Chicago), the idea of a round building continues to be ignored.

In large cities, where the optimum use of available space is the most important factor, rectangles will always be preferable. But the choice is not always obvious. In this case, the architects, R. Seifert and Partners (who are also responsible for the new skyscraper in St Giles) chose a round design because it provided the best use of the space. To have covered the whole of the ground floor area with a rectangle would have been impossible because it would have effectively robbed the surrounding buildings of daylight, and a smaller rectangle was actually less economical than a round shape.

The building, constructed in prefabricated units of a new compound called Portcret (a fusion of Portland stone chip-pings with concrete mixture) will house a branch of the District Bank, showrooms, a petrol station, two car parks, and office quarters.

The most extraordinary feature of London's first contemporary round building is that hardly anyone, with the exception of those who actually work in it, are ever going to enjoy it. Most of it will be screened by a conventional rectangular slab (90 feet high) on the Kingsway frontage.

The original design submitted to the GLC was for the rotunda alone. The building was to be about 300 feet high, standing back from the road on its own. The planning authorities turned this down. No building there was permitted to rise above 150 feet for the curious reason that, though it is half a mile from the river, it would "spoil the river front". And it would never do for Kingsway, a corridor of monumental architectural banality which was bought and developed by the LCC at the turn of the century, to have its atmosphere of formal grandeur disrupted by anything as outlandish as a round building.

Seifert say they did not contest the ruling because serious objections result in an involved process of inquiries, commissions and tribunals, which may take up to two years and show no result at the end of it all. An expensive delay.

So dull rectangular buildings will continue to go up in order to "fit in" with existing dullness - a vicious circle?

I like a lotta noise, says Mr Dolly

In Suite 412 at the Savoy there is a big glassy view of the Thames with barges prettily cavorting by. There is also a man with a beard and nice brown eyes and pale orange trousers who is eating steak and peas and accidentally breaking a chair. He is Gower Champion, the director of Hello Dolly! which opens at Drury Lane on Thursday, 2 December.

The show is currently running on Broadway, in San Francisco, in Chatanooga, Tennessee, and somewhere in Australia.

Gower Champion is 42, one of those Americans with mild surfaces. He is being very successful indeed.

He has three projects lined up: a musical version of the play The Fourposter which is to be called I do, I do and will have a cast of two, Mary Martin and a man yet to be named. He has agreed to do a straight play, a farce, starring Paul Ford, the man who is the Colonel in the Phil Silvers television series. And thirdly, there is a film in the offing - a musical version of Goodbye Mr. Chips, starring Richard Burton as Chips. No Elizabeth Taylor.

"It's not big enough for her. I'm looking for an unknown, an English girl, say 28."

Gower Champion started off as half a dancing act - his wife Marge was the other half. They did six films. "We had a curious approach to Hollywood, my wife and I. We weren't looking for stardom. We just wanted to dance together."

Then he started doing choreography, then some bits and pieces of directing, things like commercials for the Bell Telephone Company. His first big chance was directing the musical Bye Bye Birdie. That did well but unfortunately it was followed by what he calls his "Year of the Dead Cat."

He directed a film with Debbie Reynolds. "Look, imagine. Debbie Reynolds, six kids and a dog. It was terrible. It was cute. It was pure treacle." Then he directed a Lillian Hellman play which also flopped and he got the sack.

The man who sacked him is currently employing his wife, Marge - she opens in The Playroom on 5 December which is why he is going home on 4 December.

"Why shouldn't she work for him? He was right to sack me. I was awful."

Champion has quickly become the kind of director people enjoy working for. "I didn't know they did. But I guess I'm interested in people so I don't holler at them."

Fifty-one times he has been asked to compare his leading ladies in the five productions of Dolly - Mary Martin, Ginger Rogers, Carol Cooke and Betty Grable. Fifty-one times he has refused, saying "Ho ho ho, won't you have another drink?" That trap's not for me.

"I'm not an artist," says Mr Champion. "When I do a show like Dolly, this may sound flip, flippant, you know, I go for the hand. I like entertainment. I like a coupla good show-stoppers, nice tunes. I see the musical as a theatre form, rather than an art form.

"It's very seldom you get theatricality these days. That's why I liked The Royal Hunt of the Sun and A Man for All Seasons. They were theatrical. I don't like realism. I like a lotta noise, a lotta excitement. There's room for it in show business. There's room for everything, strip tease, Chekhov. . . ."

Magnate House - rather like a flat honeycomb

WHEN THE FLEET WAS IN AT MOBILE

Patricia Highsmith

WITH the bottle of chloroform in her hand, Geraldine stared at the man on the back porch. He was deep in, short, his breath whistling through his teeth the way he breathed when he wasn't going to wake up. He'd been asleep since dawn, and she knew nothing to do but sit in mid-morning, having been drinking all day. Now was certain.

She pulled her silk-stockinged leg out of the drawer below the sink, tore a big rag out of the towel, and then she folded the big rag over the square lump and on the sink. She wet it at the sink, and she had trouble because she had started shaking, and she was out of her nose and she had the cloth belt of the jacket fast ironed and laid out. Then she got the rag from the tool box, and she would need it, and she was on the back porch. She sat the straight chair close to the sink, and she unscrewed the bottle and soaked the rag. She held the rag over the sink for a few moments, and she let it slowly up toward the sink. It didn't move. But she was doing something to the rag, she thought, she could feel it, sweet and sick and like death.

Then she heard the Red Dog always gave at the dawn, and his groan and his howl around and lay on the spot by the side of the house, and she thought: the chloroform was on, and there he is sleeping, as alive as when he was fourteen years.

CLARK moved his head up and down as if he were agreeing with her, and her hand, her rigid body, her nose like a part of her face, her voice inside her head. I wouldn't have done this if there was another way, but he won't let me out of the house! She thought of Mrs. Trevelyan's look of approval when she told her they were going to put Red Dog to sleep, because it wasn't safe for strangers to come around any more, Red Dog nipping at them with his one eyetooth.

She peered at the pulse in Clark's temple. It beat at the bottom of a wriggly green vein along his hairline that had always reminded her of a map of the Mississippi River. Then the rag bumped the end of Clark's nose, he turned his head aside, and still her hand followed the nose as if she couldn't have dragged it away if she'd wanted to, and perhaps she couldn't have. But the black eyelashes did not move at all, and she remembered how distinguished she'd once thought Clark looked with the sinks either side of his high thin forehead and the black hair like a wild bush above it, and the black moustache so big it was old-fashioned but suited Clark, like his old-fashioned tailor-made jackets and his square-toed boots.

She looked at the grey alarm clock that had been watching it all from the shelf—for about seven minutes now. How long did it take? She opened the bottle and poured more until it fell cool on to her palm, and held it back under the nose. The pulse still beat, but the breaths were shorter and fainter. Her arm ached so, she looked off through the porch screen and tried to think of something else. A rooster crowed out by the cow barn, like a new day a-dawning, she thought remembering a song, and she counted 20 ticks on the clock, one for each year old she was, and looked at it, and it was 12 minutes now, and when she looked again, the pulse was gone. But she mustn't be fooled by that, she thought, and looked harder at the hairs in his nostrils that didn't move and maybe wouldn't have anyway, but she couldn't hear anything. Then she stood up, and on second thought set the rag on the black moustache and left it there. She stared at the arm lying out on the sheet and the hand, a well-shaped hand, she'd always thought, for all its hairiness, with the gold band on the little finger that was his mother's wedding ring, he said, but the very left hand that had hit her many a time nevertheless, and she'd probably felt the ring, too. She stood there several seconds, not knowing why, then hurried into the kitchen and whipped off her apron and her housedress.

She put on the flower-printed summer dress she deliberately hadn't worn much with Clark, because it reminded her of the happiest days at Mobile, tossed the ruffled short sleeves into place with a familiar almost forgotten shake of her shoulders that made her feel practically her old self again, and with the dress still unfastened, ran on tiptoe out on the porch and saw the rag was still lying on his mouth. For good measure, she poured the rest of the bottle on the rag. And didn't the claw hammer look silly now? She took the hammer back to the drawer.

WHEN she was all dressed except for make-up, she took the towel from her face, and propped the window of her room wide as it would go. She stepped back from the dresser mirror, appraising herself anxiously, then stepped forward and put wide arcs of red on the bows of her upper lip, the way she liked it, dropped a cloud of powder on her nose and spread it quickly in all directions. Her cheeks were so curved now, she'd hardly have known herself, she thought, but she wasn't too plump, just right. She still had that combination everyone said was unique of come-hither plus the bloom of youth, and how many girls had that? How many girls could be proposed to by a minister's son, which was what had happened to her in Montgomery, and then have a life like she'd had in Mobile, the toast of the fleet? She laughed archly at herself in the mirror, though without making a sound—but who was there to hear her if she did laugh—and jogged her brown blonde curls superfluously with her palms. She'd curled her hair with the iron this morning after Clark got in, and done as good a job as she'd ever done in her life, though all the while she'd known what she was going to do to Clark. And had she packed the curling iron?

She dragged her old black suitcase from behind the curtain under the sink, and found the curling iron right on top. She went back into the bedroom for her handbag. Her cigarettes. She ran to get the package of Lucky Strikes from beside the soap dish in the kitchen, and for a moment her spaced front teeth bit her underlip, the pencilled eye-brows lifted with a deploring quiver, as she gazed for the last time at the red rickrack she'd tacked around the shelf to beautify it, which had been completely lost on Clark, then she turned and went across the back porch and out.

Red Dog whined at her, and she dropped the suitcase and ran back into the house with his empty pan, got a hunk of stale cornbread from the bread box and crumbled it, scraped skillet grease over it and with reckless extravagance the rest of the beef stew, too. Wouldn't Red Dog be surprised at such food at 11 in the morning? Red Dog was so surprised, he got on to his legs for it, wagging his old red tail that was as thin and full of jagged points as a rooster feather.

Hopping and dodging the puddles of red water, she ran daintily in her high-heeled grey lizard pumps down the rut of a road across the west meadow. She felt happy as a lark this morning in her best shoes that weren't at all practical for traveling, she supposed, with their open toes and heels, but gave her such a lift! At the edge of the thicket, she turned and looked back at the farm. It wasn't the time of day she liked best. She liked just before sunset and just after sunrise, when the sun caught the tops of things and the level country was dotted with little bright green islands and the grazing cows had streaks of red fire along their straight backs. Red and green like a Christmas tree, she'd said 14 months ago when she'd come here to live with Clark, the land always so cool and fresh as if a light shower had just stopped falling and the sun had come out. It'll be Christmas from now on, Clark, she said, feeling like the end of a movie, and the teeth bit ruefully for another delicious instant of self-pity. Good-bye to the long brown house, the cow barn and the henhouse and the little privy!

The northbound bus wouldn't pass for nearly an hour, she knew, so she went on across the highway and into the other woods where there was a brook, and sat down 'In the evening a woman should be strong. She should try to be seductive'

"This youth movement in England amuses me. It doesn't impress me - it amuses me. After all, you needed it, didn't you?" But Gerard Pipard was in London for four days just to see everything happening - and down at 'Dolly's' he looked amused, all right. He had taken a close look at Carnaby Street, too. "But the belts are a little too wide, the collars too long, the prints too wild. Full of enthusiasm, but a little vulgar.

"Young people in England today are caught in a big reaction, their enthusiasm is exciting, and their way of life much less hypocritical. But really this is not the good time. In five, maybe ten years, things will be much better. And the things accomplished then will have real importance. For now, I think that the young designers must become more positive - a stronger difference between one and the other. Ready-to-Wear has youth, quality, wit and style. But what it does not have is class. This is why I moved into couture. Now I am my own master, and all the people who work, they do everything with such love. I would prefer to dress few people with personality than to see my clothes everywhere. Personality is the most important quality. If I saw 10 girls in a coat of mine, there would surely only be one I liked. I would hate that. Of course it surprised them at Nina Ricci that I was so young. We had a few problems at first because they didn't quite understand my feeling of couture, but now things are going very well commercially, so all is well.

"The idea that I hate most in fashion is uniform - and this has nothing whatever to do with Communism. Looking into the future, people seem to see white space dresses and rigid rocket suits. For me, the opposite. If people wear space suits for work, to relax they need to escape to feathers and fur."

Haven't we been escaping that way all along?

"Yes, but not in a rocket. In the evening a woman should be strong. She should try to be seductive, because after all, that is the reason for her dressing well. In the day a modern woman does the job of a man and dresses for an active life - but in the evening she must be attractive, or very soon she will realise her mistake and then be sorry.

"Age is less and less important in fashion now. We are evolving away from age, towards expression of personality. And in the same way, evolving away from the importance of price, towards the real excitement of the object itself. For example, I can be just as excited about a shirt I buy for almost nothing from Saks Fifth Avenue, as with a suit just made for me by my tailor in Paris. Once I arrived in New York without a smoking - I hated them - uniforms - and I had to go to a ball. So I rush to Macy's and buy one for 80 dollars, and it is marvellous. Much as I hate everyone to wear the same, men must wear black at night as a background for women in their colours. Anyway, I don't mind: black suits me."

What about the future of couture?

"Couture will have to change eventually, of course. But it should be a gradual change. Probably towards the American approach to ready-to-wear. Still expensive, and very well made. But Paris is still the centre of the world for all things that are beautiful." Do the short London skirts shock you?

"No, not at all. But then I'm not easily shocked. Actually, I think that modern furniture in London is even more exciting than the clothes. I have bought that beautiful tall chrome lamp from those young people in the Fulham Road. In fact, I'm exchanging all my antiques for modern furniture now. It is so much more actual, functional and immediate. It's good to be surrounded by things of the present. And after all, you can get tired of feeling guilty for bumping into a Chippendale chair. Yes, I love to work in France, love travelling everywhere, but I think now that I would like to live in London. The atmosphere is good. And the people amuse me."

Parking: No car park and they are on the fringe of meter area (6d for 15 minutes). Nearest tube station is St. James's.

chariot ride to Goblin land where you meet Father Christmas. Costs 2s 6d including a present, and adults can accompany children for 1s, unless they want a present too, when they pay 2s 6d like anybody else.

Gift wrapping: Yes.

Christmas opening hours: From 29 November to 23 December, open to 6 p.m., Thursdays to 7 p.m.; Saturdays to 1 p.m. Close at 1 p.m. Christmas Eve. Parking: The private car park under Derry & Toms is for Barkers' customers too; 1s for first two hours, 1s for each subsequent hour. Barkers also have an arrangement with the National Car Park in Young Street for their customers, who should show proof of shopping with receipts or credit cards; 1s for 2 hours and 6d for each subsequent hour.

Asprey, 165 New Bond Street, W 1 (HYD 6767)

Type of present: Best known for its jewellery, gold accessories such as cigarette cases, powder compacts, silk scarves, super handbags in leather and crocodile, watches and beautifully equipped games chests. A good place to get other people to buy presents for you—prices tend to the luxurious, though it is possible to buy perfectly reasonable presents here. Service is equally excellent whether you've come in to buy a £2,000 bracelet or a note pad. They are not doing anything special for Christmas, but they hardly need to.

Gift wrapping: Yes, and there is no charge.

Christmas opening hours: Normal hours are 9 to 5.30, 9 to 1 on Saturdays. Will be open from 9 to 4 on Saturday 18 December, and 9 to 5 on Christmas Eve.

Parking: Not easy round Bond Street—best chance is probably a meter in Berkeley Square (6d for ½ hour) or, frankly, a taxi.

Debenham & Freebody,
Wigmore Street, W 1
(LAN 4444)

Type of present: Grand and luxurious department store, good for accessories like gloves, scarves, stockings, scent and make-up. This year have a display of Christmas presents in the central hall and a large range of Christmas decorations. Also have installed a gift hostess just inside the main doors, who supervises the free gift wrapping service, and does a special gift wrapping service for 2s a parcel.

Gift wrapping: Yes, see above.

Christmas opening hours: Will be open on the four Saturday mornings before Christmas from 9 to 1 (starting Saturday 27 November) and will stay open until 7 on Thursdays.

Parking: Their car park off Welbeck Street is open from 10 a.m.; costs 2s 6d an hour up to 2 hours, 2-3 hours 3s 6d, 3-4 hours 4s 6d, 4-5 hours 7s 6d.

Dickins & Jones,
Regent Street, W 1
(REG 7070)

Type of present: Good for presents for women; large jewellery and perfumery department, good belts and lots of pretty clothes. Have a Christmas card department, and an extended haberdashery department for small presents.

Gift wrapping: Yes; choice of five different wrapping papers; costs 2s for box, continued overleaf

Cartier, 175 New Bond Street, W 1 (HYD 6962)

Type of present: Notably jewellery and gold objects; cigarette cases, vanity cases, bracelets, watches for men and women. You can spend almost anything you like here, from £8 for a gold bracelet to £50,000 for a solitaire diamond ring.

Gift wrapping: Will gift-wrap on request for no charge; but their traditional red leather cases are probably gift wrap enough to suit most people.

Christmas opening hours: Normal hours, 9.30 to 5 on weekdays; on the three Saturday mornings in December will be open until 1 p.m.

Parking: Pretty difficult round Bond Street; they suggest customers use the Albemarle Street entrance where there are meters at 6d for ½ hour, but let your chauffeur worry about that.

Casa Pupo, Pimlico Road, SW 3 (SLO 6366)

Type of present: China, glass, ceramics, all from Spain. Famous for their Spanish rugs and their white pottery. This year they have heavy glass goblets in marvelous murky colours (see picture left) for 19s 6d each, and new glass candleholders in plain glass colour, but barley sugar stems.

Gift wrapping: All presents wrapped in their own decorative paper. No charge is made.

Christmas opening hours: As normal, 9.30 to 6, 9.30 to 5.30 Saturdays.

Parking: No meters in this area, and they say parking shouldn't be too difficult.

Choses of Hampstead,
80 to 82 Heath Street,
NW 3 (HAM 3075)

Type of present: Table and kitchenware, practically anything for a house, including china, glass, cutlery, furniture.

Gift wrapping: Yes, in their own paper (no charge) or they supply carrier bags.

Christmas opening hours: Normal hours are 9 to 5.30 weekdays except Thursday, when they close at 1 p.m., 9 to 6 Saturdays. Open until 7 p.m. on 10, 17, 22, 23 and 24 December. From 10 December onwards the shop will stay open Thursday afternoon.

Parking: No meters, and parking should be reasonably easy.

G

Galts, 30 Gt Marlborough St, W 1 (REG 0829)

Type of present: One of the best toyshops around; this year they have, for the Christmas period only, a toyshop in Woollands (see next week). Their own shop has recently doubled in size, and they have a new department for older children. In it you can buy construction sets from which children can create things themselves without following detailed instructions; a paper collage set, for instance, containing all kinds of textured and coloured paper, stars and mosaics, for 19s 6d. Also sell wall charts which as well as looking attractive give detailed information on three factual subjects (birds, the sea, and aviation) and one fantasy one (fairytale landscape with characters from fairy tales and nursery rhymes) from 15s to £1.

Gift wrapping: No.

Christmas opening hours: Normal opening hours are 9 to 5.30 and 9 to 1 on Saturdays. Will be open for Christmas from 9 to 6 (9 to 7 on Thursdays) and 9 to 2 on Saturdays.

Parking: There are plenty of short-term meters (6d for ½ hour) and they reckon with luck you should be able to get in and out on 6d.

Gamages, High Holborn, WC 1 (HOL 8484)

Type of present: The place to go to for garden and construction tools, garden furniture, motor-car accessories, aquaria. Have an extended toy department called Alice in Legoland, featuring moving models made out of Lego construction toys. Father Christmas can be seen for nothing, but a gift from him costs 2s 6d. Gift wrapping: No.

Christmas opening hours: From November 29 till 6 every evening, Thursdays until 7. Saturdays 1 p.m.

Parking: Gamages have an arrangement with the public car-park opposite (in High Holborn); you can get one hour's free parking for every £1 you spend in the store, with a limit of three hours.

General Trading Co, Sloane Street, SW 3 (SLO 0411)

Type of present: Glossy accessories for houses; very good and imaginative kitchen department, large china and glass department. Among their toys they have a good collection of games, ranging from the one in the picture for 4- to 10-year-olds, up to a war-game called D Day for rather clever adults.

Gift wrapping: Yes; they sell Christmas paper, ribbon and tags, and will gift wrap for from 1s 6d upwards, depending on the size of the parcel.

Christmas opening hours: Monday 6 to Thursday 23 December 9 to 6.30 (except Saturday 11, 9 to 1). Saturday 18 December, 9 to 6.30. Christmas Eve 9 to 1.

Parking: Yellow line in front of shop, but you may have a chance in one of the surrounding streets or squares. Nearest tube station, Sloane Square.

Gorrings, Buckingham Palace Road, SW 1 (VIC 6666)

Type of present: Toy fair on the second floor. Christmas cracker and card bar on the first floor, candle shop on ground floor. "Gifts for Him" and "Gifts for Her" counters dotted all round the shop; gourmet shop enlarged for Christmas, selling special food hampers. Their golden gift cases are parcels wrapped in gold foil, costing from 45s to 10 gns, and with different themes; Dinner by Candlelight, containing candles, dishes, a bottle of wine is one, another is a cheese party box, with cheeseboard, knife, and jar of Stilton. Gift wrapping: Yes, from 3s.

Christmas opening hours: Normally Gorrings don't open on Saturdays, but until the Saturday before Christmas they will be open to 1 p.m. On weekdays until Christmas Eve will be open to 6; Wednesday and Thursdays to 7 p.m.

Parking: Gorrings have an arrangement with the Meyer Bros. multi-storey car park in Buckingham Palace Road (corner of Eccleston Street). You can leave your car there and a Gorrings car will pick you up and take you to the store, where you get a car park voucher from the desk by the main door. (2s 6d for 2 hours 5s for 4). When you have finished shopping you are driven back to the car park.

Gucci, 172 New Bond Street, W 1 (MAY 2716)

Type of present: Leather goods all made in Italy, mostly expensive, but a Gucci handbag is worth having. This year have imported giant fountain pens for desks, covered in brown, green, red or black leather, £10. Also possibly the last word in hidden conspicuous consumption, gold collar stiffeners at 6 guineas a pair. Gift vouchers:

Gift wrapping: Everything is packed in a Gucci box with gold paper and ribbons, at no charge.

and washed the red mud off her heels with a piece of Kleenex. The smoke from her cigarette was exactly the colour of the Spanish moss. It drifted upward as slow and unbroken as if she sat in a nice room somewhere talking. She sprang to her feet at the sound of a motor, but it was only a big gasoline truck coming up from New Orleans, and then she did hear the bus purring around the curve and she should have known the gasoline truck wasn't it, because her heart jumped now as if all the happiness in the world lay in the bus, and she was out in the road waving her arm before she knew it. The many, many times she'd watched the bus go by without being able to catch it!

And now she was climbing aboard, the floor rattling and swaying under her feet, northward.

"Where're you going, ma'am?" the driver asked.

She almost said Mobile, but she laughed and said, "Birmingham," instead, which was where her sister lived. "But I'd like to go to Alistaire first." Alistaire was just a little town in northern Louisiana where she'd stayed overnight once with her parents when she was a child, and she'd planned on stopping there for a couple of hours on her way to Birmingham. She paid with the 10 dollar bill she'd taken from Clark's pocket that morning. Besides that, she had nine dollars saved out of grocery money when Clark had used to let her go with the Trelawneys to Etienne Station.

The bus was so crowded, there were three or four people standing, but when she walked up the aisle, a young man in blue overalls got right up and gave her his seat. "Thank you, sir," she said.

"You're welcome, ma'am," the young man said, and stood in the aisle beside her.

The woman next to her had a little boy asleep in her lap. His head pressed roundly against Geraldine's thigh. In a moment, she thought, she would ask the woman a question about her child, she didn't know what as yet. Loosening the imitation sable furpiece around her neck—she'd just realized from the dark blue splotch under the arm of the young man that it was really quite hot today—Geraldine settled back to enjoy the ride. She smiled up at the young man and he smiled back, and she thought: how nice everybody is on the bus and they know by looking at her she's just as nice as they are. And what a relief it was, too, not to have Clark along, accusing her of wanting to sleep with the young man in blue overalls, just because she'd accepted his seat! She shook her head deploringly, felt a curl come undone over her ear, and casually tucked it back. And accusing her of flirting with Mr. Trelawney when everybody knew Mrs. Trelawney was her best friend and always was along when they drove to town, which was the only time she ever saw him.

"Women that sleep with ten men at a time never get pregnant!" Clark's voice boomed out from the privy before he banged the door to, and fidgeting, Geraldine leaned toward the woman beside her and asked, "Do you have many children?" and the woman gave her such a long, funny stare that Geraldine almost laughed out loud despite herself before the woman answered:

"Four. That's enough."

Geraldine nodded, and glanced up at the young man standing by her who shifted and smiled down at her, showing pink gums and big white teeth with one upper molar missing. Young and shy and lonely, Geraldine thought, almost as fine as the young sailors in Mobile, only not so handsome as most, but she edged away from him nevertheless, because the blue overalls seemed to be rubbing against her shoulder in a way she didn't like, or was she getting just as prudish as Clark? Oh yes, if they asked her any questions, she'd tell them what a prudish old maid Clark really was, not even fulfilling his marital duties, not that she cared, but she'd heard of a lot of women suing for divorce just for that. Then accusing her of not being able to have children! Everyone in Etienne Parish knew Clark was strange. He'd served a jail sentence for swindling a business partner when he was young, and not so long ago people couldn't remember had been clapped in jail for preaching religion, but preaching like a maniac and nearly killing a man who had disagreed with him. Geraldine crossed her legs and pulled her skirt down.

THE bus made her feel safe and powerful, as if she were the centre of a mountain, or awake in the centre of a rather heavy, pleasant dream that would just keep on and on. She might stay on until her money gave out, then stop off and take a job somewhere. She'd go back to her own name, Geraldine Ann Lewis, plain and simple, and rent a little furnished apartment and potter around every evening cooking things, going to a movie maybe once a week and to church Sunday mornings, and be very cautious about making friends, especially men friends.

The little boy's head pressed harder against her thigh, the bus turned, and she saw they were approaching a town. She didn't know it, she thought excitedly, but she did. It was Dalton.

And if anyone cared to question her as to why she had done what she did, she thought as she made her way down the aisle, taking her suitcase with her, she would tell them the whole story, how Clark had said he loved her and asked her to marry him and live with him in his house near Etienne Station, north of New Orleans, and how she had cooked and cleaned and been the best wife she knew, and how as the months went on she saw that Clark really hated her and had only married her to be able to pick on her and—she saw it clearly now—had deliberately chosen a wife from a place like the Star Hotel so he could hold it over her and make himself feel superior. She poked her straws through the hole in the top of the milk container.

"Hey, cain't you say nothing, girl?" It was the young man in blue overalls grinning down at her, the sudden burr of his voice making her think first of a man who'd bent down to say something to her in a wheatfield once where she'd come with her father to watch the threshing, then of the sailors' voices in Mobile, and fear dropped like a needle through her from head to foot before she could even wonder why she'd thought of that wheatfield she hadn't thought of since, and she turned away, leaving the 15 cents on the counter, not knowing if it was his or hers, replying, strangely breathless:

"I just can't talk just now!"

She'd been riding several minutes on the bus before she noticed the young man in blue overalls wasn't aboard. If he got himself a girl in Dalton, she hoped she'd be a nice girl. But maybe he was just going home to his folks, why should she even think he was going to a girl? She'd stop thinking things like that once she got far enough away from Clark. Clark wouldn't even let her ride to Etienne Station with the Trelawneys any more. She could let them know about the last time she'd gone with the Trelawneys, when Clark had been off somewhere for two days and there'd been no food in the house. He'd knocked the groceries out of her arms and slapped her face, back and forth, not saying a word, until she just collapsed on the groceries, crying as if her heart would break. And the scar from the belt buckle, she could show them that.

Without looking at it, she massaged the U-shaped scar on the back of her hand. Since she had got on the bus, her hands had never been still, the long backward-bending fingers clamping the soft palms symmetrically against the corners of her handbag, only to fly off to some other perch, as if she kept trying to pose them properly for a photograph. Her lizard pumps stood upright, side by side on the vibrating floor.

ALISTAIRE was the next rest stop. She didn't remember too much about the town except the name, or perhaps the town had changed a good deal in ten years, but the name was enough, and the fact she'd spent one of those happy, carefree nights in a tourist home with her family on one of their summer vacations. The sun was already down, so she decided to stay the night and get an early start tomorrow, as her father had used to say on their tours in the car. "Where you reckon we'll sleep tonight, papa?" she or her sister Gladys would ask him from the back seat, where the knaki blankets and the picnic lunch and probably a watermelon would be tied up and stowed away in such apple-pie order it was a pleasure just to crawl in the little space beside her sister. Her father'd say, "Lord knows, sugar," or maybe, "Guess we'll make Aunt Doris' by tonight, Gerie. Remember your Aunt Doris?" which was almost as exciting as a new tourist home, because like as not she'd have forgotten her aunt's house since the year before. Wouldn't she like to forget Clark's house in a year's time, too, but the memory didn't work like that once you were grown, she knew. She remembered the Star Hotel only too well after 14 months, every six-sided tile in the brown and white floor of the lobby that always smelt of disinfectant like a clinic, and the view from her room window of the lighted glass star that hung over the entrance.

Not far from the bus stop, she found a house with a TOURISTS sign on the front lawn, and though the woman seemed a little suspicious at first because she didn't have a car and then because she didn't have a man—but what could be suspicious about not having a man?—she was soon in a clean, very tastefully furnished front room all to herself. Geraldine bathed in the bathroom down the hall, lifting the washrag so the water ran caressingly down her arms and legs, thinking—"How long it's been since you've been my very own!"

She put on her nightgown and went right to bed, because she wanted to lie in the dark and think. No one would likely find Clark for three days, she thought. His cheeses were due at Etienne Station tomorrow, but they were used to his being a day late when he was on a bender. And since this was Thursday, the Trelawneys weren't likely to stop by until Saturday when they went to town, if then.

"I married you to help you, but the truth's not in you. You are the first entirely evil human soul I ever saw and it's my everlasting curse that I'm married to you!"

She spread her legs restlessly under the sheet, and brought them close together again like scissors. The crisp new sheet rattled about her with a sound like thunder. She pressed her fingertips harder into her thighs. Her mother in Montgomery would say, "Well, you did finally fill out, didn't you, child?" Geraldine turned on her side and let a few tears roll out, over the bridge of her nose and into the pillowcase, because her mother had been dead almost a year now. The wind gave a sigh that blew the bottoms of the curtains out, held them reaching toward her for a moment, then twirled them like two capes. And she let a few more tears roll, thinking of her and Marianne's apartment in Mobile and of how young and happy they'd been together when the fleet was first in. Oh, she'd tell them all about Mobile, too, if they wanted to ask her, she hadn't a thing to be ashamed of. It was the country's lawmakers themselves and the police who made money out of it who ought to be ashamed.

She wouldn't tell them about Doug, though, because it hadn't been his fault. She'd say she came to the Star Hotel accidentally when she hadn't any other place to stay, which was true. She could see herself telling it to some solemn judge with grey hair, asking him to judge for himself what on earth else she could have done—right up to the moment she lay here now in a strange tourist home—and she could hear him assuring her she couldn't have done otherwise. She'd come to Mobile with her friend Marianne Hughes from Montgomery to take factory jobs after they'd finished high school, but they'd had to take jobs as waitresses until the factory jobs were open. She and Marianne had had a little apartment together, and she'd been able to send 15 dollars a week home to her mother, and they hadn't been there any time before the fleet came in. Not even the fleet, just a couple of cruisers and a destroyer stopping for repairs, but the city was suddenly full of sailors and officers, everything going full tilt day and night, and Marianne used to wake her up every morning at a quarter to six yelling, "out of bed, honey child, the fleets in at Mobile!" which might sound silly now she was grown, but at 18 and free as the wind, it had made her jump out of bed feeling like a million dollars, laughing and tingling with energy, no matter how tired she might be really.

She and Marianne would throw on their waitress uniforms and hurry down to the restaurant without even coffee, through the streets that would be full of sailors even then, some of whom they knew, some up early and some still out and maybe drunk, but by and large, she'd still say they were the finest, cleanest young men she'd ever met. There were always sailors in the restaurant for breakfast, and she and Marianne would tell them they were going to work in the marine supplies factory in five weeks, and the sailors would probably ask them for dates, and if they were especially nice looking, she and Marianne would accept.

Then Marianne married a chief petty officer, and she'd had to give up the apartment. She'd known Douglas Ellison, a pharmacist's mate from Connecticut, for about three weeks then, and they intended to marry, too, when they were absolutely sure they loved each other. She hadn't yet found an apartment, so Doug had got her a room in the Star Hotel and paid a week's rent for it. And he stayed with her a couple of nights—the first fellow she'd ever had anything to do with, despite what most girls in Mobile were doing, Marianne included. His ship had been leaving at the end of the week, but he was due back in a month, and then they were going to be married.

That was also the month the job was to have been open at the factory, but wasn't. And then—it never rains but it pours—she lost her job at the restaurant, because the girl who'd had it before came back, or so they said, from the marine supplies factory that was laying off instead of hiring. And suddenly there were so many people unemployed, one couldn't even get a job washing dishes in exchange for three meals.

She'd been ready to go back to Montgomery, when the Star Hotel told her they couldn't get her trunk out of the basement for several more days, and upped the bill twice what it should have been so she wouldn't be able to pay it, and when she threatened to call the police, told her if she did, they'd have her in jail. She'd gone out to tell the police anyway, and the doorman had stopped her. Didn't she know the Star Hotel was a house, he said. Oh, she'd known a lot was going on at the Star Hotel, what else could you expect with the fleet in and right on the waterfront, but she hadn't known it was a common brothel. And suddenly there were strangers standing all around her, pretending to take it for granted she was one of those women, too, laughing at her when she said Doug Ellison was her fiancé. They dared her to talk to a policeman, the police would have her in for 10 years, they said, and she got terrified. Some of the other girls there said they'd been in the same boat, but didn't mind now because what work was there to be found outside anyway, and it was easier than a lot of work, whereupon she lost the bit of dinner she'd just eaten. She couldn't eat and barely slept, and they started sending sailors into her room as if she'd have anything to do with them after Doug Ellison. But no letter ever came from Doug, she knew because Connie, one of the girls there, promised she would see she got it if it came. They watched the girls' mail, especially the outgoing, and she had to keep writing to her mother that she was still working at Carter's Restaurant, and very happy, hoping her mother would read between the lines, but her mother's cancer was getting worse then, and she never did. The sailors that came into the Star Hotel, even if they were fairly decent looking, made her sick that she'd ever felt gay hearing Marianne yell in the mornings, and sicker that she'd ever thought she would tell her grandchildren of the most exciting period in her life in stories that began, "When the fleet was in at Mobile, I was just eighteen . . ."

And if anyone chose to cast the first stone at her because she finally yielded, she would relate how they stopped putting enough food on her trays, and how all the girls, even Connie Stegman, advised her to cooperate and lay a little money by, because they didn't give a snap for her life itself. But when they found she was hoarding her money, they came and found it and took it, for the truth was they didn't trust their own doorman when it came to taking bribes. She threatened to kill herself and she meant it, so they sent her to Chattanooga with two other girls in a car, to a hotel owned by the partner of the Star Hotel manager. If anybody didn't believe her, let them go to Chattanooga and see the Blackstone Hotel standing there for themselves. Let them go inside and look around. She got so rundown at the Blackstone, they sent her back to the Star Hotel. It worked this way: there was a whole syndicate all over the South, and wherever business was heavy, they shipped girls, or if they thought a girl was about to make a break, they shipped her where she didn't know any one.

Geraldine sat up at the knock on the door.

"Got everything you need?" called the frail high voice of the landlady.

"Yes—" She swallowed air, and her heart beat wildly. "Thank you."

"There's ice water in the pitcher on the dresser. Hope you weren't asleep, didn't see no light."

"No, I wasn't asleep," said Geraldine, beginning to smile.

"Awful early," said the woman pleasantly, sounding as if he turned away.

"Yes, it is." Geraldine wished she could think of something nicer to say. "Good night!" she called, and lay down on her back, still smiling.

And then Clark. She'd tell them about those four visits of Clarks' to the Star Hotel and every word he said, and just let them judge for themselves. She could still see him exactly as he looked when he stepped into her room for the first time, a really impressive man with his straight back and heavy black brows and moustache. He'd had on his square-toed boots with his trouser cuffs tucked into them and his long, nearly black jacket, and she'd thought right away he looked like some kind of a statesman or maybe an actor around the time of the Civil War. He was still and formal and hardly said a word or even looked at her until just as he went out the door, and she remembered that look like no other, because it had scared her. If she'd only obeyed her instinct then! He had turned with his hand on the knob of the open door and looked back at her over his shoulder, as if he might have forgotten something or as if he wanted to remember her because he hated her. She hadn't liked him at all, and when he came in a few days later, she'd been about to tell him to leave, when he just sat down and lighted a cigar and started talking. He wanted to know all about her, how old she was and how she happened to be there, and though his brown eyes were really quite kind, almost fatherly if it wasn't sacrilegious to say such a thing, she'd resented his idle curiosity and not answered much.

THEN the third time, he had brought her candy, and the fourth time flowers, presenting them with a bow, and the fourth time she'd told him the whole story and cried on his shoulder when he sat down beside her, because she'd never told anyone, not even Connie Stegman, that much. "What would you say if I asked you to be my wife?" he'd asked right out of the blue. "You think it over till I come back. I'll be back in a week." She hadn't believed him, but naturally she'd thought about it, about the farm he'd described in the flat country north of New Orleans, and the fancy cheeses he made for a living and the duck-callers he made out of wood and shipped to hunters everywhere—little wooden boxes with a cover that scraped and made a sound like a duck, he'd brought her one to show her—and she'd thought what a special kind of farmer he was, not just a dirt farmer but an educated gentleman. And the girls at the hotel told her how lucky she was, for Clark Reeder was a fine man even if he was over forty and a little old-fashioned, and Margaret the hotel director had told her how many girls had found themselves good husbands that way and how often the husbands came back and said what fine wives the girls made. So she'd thought about being mistress of a farmhouse that she would make neat as a pin and stock with good things to eat, but mainly of course she'd thought of being free and the next time he'd come she'd said yes. And like a bird out of a cage, she'd almost died of happiness at first, not even wanting the honeymoon Clark had suggested, just wanting to get settled at home. She'd cooked and sewed and scrubbed every inch of the place and been delighted to do it. But why ever tell them all that if they couldn't imagine it? Or how good it felt just to be treated like a human being again, the way Clark had said, "Herbert," speaking to Mr. Trelawney, "I'd like you to meet my wife," presenting her on his hand as if she were a queen . . .

She was pumping water by the back steps and the pump was acting queer, making a boom crash-boom whenever the water gushed out, spilling all over the bucket but not filling it, and even Red Dog was up looking at it. Then she opened her eyes and discovered the sound came from out the window—a military band! Either a parade or a circus, she thought, jumping out of bed as gaily as when Marianne used to awaken her. The music was coming from a park a couple of blocks down the street where she saw a lot of coloured lights like a celebration. She whirled around and pulled her nightgown over her head.

Clark!

He'd still be lying on the back porch with the rag on his moustache, if the wind hadn't blown it off. She shimmied into her girdle. Well, so be it. Some actions were a necessity, like killing animals for food, or sawing through the bars of a prison to get free. And Clark's house had been a prison as bad as the Star Hotel, except he never touched her, saying she was too dirty for him. Clark set himself up as her saviour while telling her all the time she tortured him. Did it make any sense to torture her and torture himself, too? She made the two red arcs on her upper lip that Clark said made her look like a harlot but which were simply better for her kind of mouth, and combed what was left of the curls out into a short bob. She snatched up her handbag and went out into the hall, but on second thought came back and left her money except for one dollar in the pocket of her coat in the closet.

FROM the sidewalk, she could see a striped tent top and something like a ferris wheel lighted up and spinning, and could hear a man yelling over a loud speaker, and between the boom-crash-booms that were louder than anything, the band played a song she was pleased she could recognize as "The Stars and Stripes Forever." She looked down and concentrated on getting across the dark road in her wobbly high heels. Her heart was going like 60 and she really must stop and get her breath before she went one step farther. And it was only a church benefit at that, she saw by the streamer over the entrance: FIRST METHODIST ANNUAL WELFARE NIGHT.

"Ad-mission only twenty-five cents!" roared the voice on one note. "And dig down in your pockets for a second quarter if you're really thinking of entering the Kingdom of Heaven!"

Geraldine pushed her money through the high window. "I'll pay my two quarters."

"One?" a voice roared.

"One."

The music stopped as soon as she went in, and there wasn't any band, she saw, it was all from the merry-go-round that had a drum and cymbal machine in the centre that kept going. A final boom-crash shimmered into silence, and Geraldine stood staring at the still bounding horses on the platform that made a hollow rattly sound like roller skates on a wooden rink and for some reason excited her terribly. The roof of the merry-go-round was like a king's crown with gilt scallops hanging around the edge, each set with a blue or red light like a jewel. Suddenly something made her gasp, something blurred her vision with tears: she had been in this very spot before, been on this merry-go-round as a child, the time she'd passed through this town with her family. They might have stopped at the same tourist home for that matter. There was the ferris wheel way back under the trees and the parking lot with the curb around it where her father's big car had stood, and the separate booth that sold pink cotton candy, and the big ice cream parlour with an open porch all around it like a summer-house—all just as it had been one night so long ago she didn't really remember. And laughing at herself, she hurried to buy her merry-go-round ticket.

The glare of white lights made her feel positively naked as she stepped on to the platform, but there were so many other grown-up people getting on—maybe some like her, coming back after many years—she forgot her self-consciousness and weaved right through the maze of nickel-plated poles to the pink horse she wanted. The boom-crash-boom started with a terrible din right in her ears, then music so loud she couldn't recognize it and had to laugh, and the pink horse rose slowly up and down. She felt herself sink again, and closed her eyes, letting it catch her up in swifter and swifter rhythm, pulling her outward so she had to hold on with both hands. She felt so happy, she could have cried. What was it, she wondered, with the music pounding in your next holiday!

FROM the moment you arrive in Mexico the charm of this hospitable country will delight you. In the capital itself, the artistic treasures of a fabulous past, romantic colonial houses, baroque churches and the striking creations of modern architecture are combined in harmony. Once outside Mexico City you will be plunged into the era of the pre-Colombian civilization. At Teotihuacan, you will stand awe stricken before the imposing grandeur and the religious implications of the Pyramids of the Sun and the Moon. In the brilliant light of Yucatan you will be confronted by the remains of Maya cities: the Governor's Palace, the Two-Headed Tiger at Uxmal, the Pyramid of Kukulcan, the Temple of the Warriors and the Thousand Columns at Chichen Itza. Colourful folklore, fine sandy beaches and hotels offering every comfort will leave you with lasting memories of Mexico.

There are numerous flights daily from Europe to Mexico and New York is only 4 ½ hours away from Mexico City.

Do not wait for the 1968 Olympic Games! Come to Mexico now!

ears and your two hands holding the pole and the small rise, small fall, so wonderful beyond all—Her throat closed, and she opened her eyes, seeing a blur of black trees and sliding dots of lights and a few figures standing at the edge of darkness smiling up. Where were her parents? She wanted to wave to them. Then her shoulders crumpled as if she had been struck and the tears fairly leapt from her eyes, because she knew it was only to be a child, with her parents waving and shouting to her to hold on, only to be astride the horse in a short dress and to be put to bed in less than an hour and to be too small to reach the bottom of the bed with her toes, and to get up tomorrow to ride in the back of the car, asking, "Where you reckon we'll sleep tonight, papa?" that was so wonderful, and it was all, all gone now forever. She felt her face twist with a tragedy too profound for tears, and deliberately she looked away from the people standing watching to the merry-go-round's centre where the scenic pictures showed "A Swiss Chalet," "Pike's Peak," "Venice" thinking quickly how she would tell them, if they asked her anything, how Clark had accused her of ever more disgusting practices, the worst he could think of, and how he brought men into the house on pretexts, just so he could accuse her of something later.

"Are you all right?" the man on the horse next to her asked, and realizing she'd been staring in his direction with what was probably a pretty funny expression, Geraldine said with a quick smile:

"Oh, perfectly all right, thank you."

She put her head up then, her eyes darting to look at this and that as if she'd never been so gay in her life. A young man in a grey tweed suit was waving at her from the other side of the merry-go-round, and she almost waved back, thinking she must know him, but she didn't. Or maybe he wasn't even waving at her, but she saw now he was, and she did know him, too. He was a boy she'd known in high school in Montgomery! His name was Frankie McSomething, she remembered.

Now he waved at her again, and she gave a little wave back, timid as if she were merely brushing something out of the air in front of her, and when he smiled wider, she saw the two creases down his lean cheeks and the bright brown eyes not flipping away shyly as they'd used to, but looking right back at her. Hadn't Frankie grown up! He clearly wanted to talk to her, and maybe they'd have a soda in the ice cream parlour and get re-acquainted and maybe like a fairy tale Frankie would fall in love with her again. He'd had a crush on her one term, but he'd been such a bashful, watching-from-a-distance sort of boy, nothing had happened. Well, she knew how to put men at their ease now.

SHE watched Frankie dismount as the horses slowed, and noticed how tall he'd grown and how clean-cut he looked with his collar and tie. She slipped down from her own horse. The platform was making the hollow sound of the roller skating-rink, but slower and slower, and there was a strange moment when she felt suddenly as sad and melancholy as autumn, really as sad as she'd ever felt in her life, so she had to force herself to smile as she stepped down to meet Frankie who was holding his hand out for hers.

"Is your name Geraldine?" he asked, making her laugh, because he was still as bashful as ever after all.

"Yes, and you're—Frankie?"

He nodded with a smile and led her gently away. "Yes."

"Well, how are things back in Montgomery?" she asked.

"Oh, they're all right. What've you been doing?"

"Well, I had a job in Mobile for a while. I was in Mobile the time the fleet was in, we always said, but it wasn't the fleet, just a couple of cruisers and a destroyer stopping for repairs, but it was mighty gay!" She tipped her head back and swung her hand that Frankie was holding. Frankie had a little scar now on the bridge of his nose, and she thought of the scar on the back of her hand and decided not to ask him about his. Life had left its marks on both of them, she supposed, though they were still so young. "Cigarette?"

"Still as shy as ever, Frankie?" she blurted, because she thought his hand shook as he lighted it for her, though her hand was shaking, too.

Frankie smiled. "How about a cold drink, Geraldine?"

"Why, I'd love one!"

They stepped up on the open porch of the ice cream parlour and sat down at one of the tables. Frankie stared shyly past her, and she thought he nodded to someone and looked behind her, but it was only the waiter coming. They ordered black and white sodas.

"Are you living here now?" Frankie asked her.

"No-o, just passing through. But I like it so here," she hurried to add, "I just might live here. Do you know I realized after I'd come here tonight that I'd been to this park before when I was a little girl? Oh, long before I even knew you!" She laughed. "Are you living here now?"

"Um-hm," he replied, still looking so pained and stiff that Geraldine had to smile.

She said nothing, letting her eyes roll up at the honeysuckle that grew along the porch eaves.

"You were in—"

"What?" Geraldine prompted.

"You were in a little town above New Orleans, weren't you, Geraldine?"

He'd even taken the trouble to ask her mother about her! "Why, yes," she said. She glanced up at a man in a dark suit standing at her elbow. There was another man on her right, between her and the porch rail. She looked at Frankie with a bewildered smile.

Frankie said, "These are my friends, Geraldine. You'll come with us, won't you?" He stood up.

"But I didn't finish my—" The man on her left took her arm. She looked at Frankie and saw his mouth close in a straight line she didn't know at all. The other man took her other arm. Frankie wasn't making a move to help her, wasn't even looking! "You're not—you're not Frankie!"

Frankie pulled something from his inside coat pocket and held it toward her.

LOUISIANA STATE POLICE, Geraldine read on a card in the billfold. She wanted to scream, but her mouth only hung open, limp.

THE man who looked like Frankie stood there staring at her, pocketing his billfold. "It's all right," he said so softly she could hardly hear. "Your husband isn't dead. He just asked us to find you."

Then her scream came as if it had been waiting just for that. She heard it reach the farthest corners of the park, and though they yanked her with them around the table, she took another breath and let it go again, let it shatter all the leaves and shatter her body, while she stared at the man in the grey suit simply because he wasn't Frankie. Then his face and the lights and the park went out, though she knew as well as she knew she still screamed that her eyes were open under her hands.

All your life you'll remember the Bahamas

When the winter weather is at its worst, escape to the happiest climate in the world...fly away to Nassau and the Resort Islands of the Bahamas, where every month's July. See your Travel Agent now

IN LONDON IT'S WINTER.

But step on a BOAC Super VC10 any day and just eleven hours away it's still July—in Nassau. (Yes, 70° to 80° twelve months out of twelve). Wake to the heavy scent of jasmine. Breakfast on canteloupe, pineapple and ripe papaya. Take a Surrey and explore historic forts. Photograph tame flamingoes marching in formation in Ardastra Gardens. Want a souvenir? Buy a conch shell from a native sloop moored in the waterfront bazaar; or shop in the world-famous Straw Market for a raffia hat to protect you from the sun.

Choose a first-class hotel in Nassau itself (so many to choose from) or get away from it all on one of the irresistible Resort Islands. Stay at a Country Club, rent a self-contained cottage on an endless Bahamian beach. Wherever you go, the enthusiasm and warm hospitality of the Bahamians will immediately put you at your ease. You'll meet wonderful people, make wonderful friends.

FINEST FISHING IN THE WORLD

By the sea. Swim. Or relax, blissfully, on pink and white powdered sands. You'll get the sun tan you've dreamed about. Action-packed fishing? The world's finest. Big game. Marlin, tarpon, wahoo and the elusive, but prized, bonefish. Every fisherman's a lucky fisherman in the Bahamas.

Play golf. Tennis. Go motor-racing—Nassau Speed Weeks are held every winter. Sail, ski. Go island-hopping: Eleuthera, Abaco, Exuma. Call on the Obeah man (witch-doctor) of Cat Island—and mind what you say! Skin-dive for lost Spanish gold off Crooked Island, Mayaguana and Caicos, where, did you know it, the Santa Cruz went down with a cargo of bullion in 1694. Play for high stakes in the fabulous Monte Carlo Room on Grand Bahama. A Bahamas Airways ticket will take you anywhere you want to go.

LAZY DAYS AND LIVELY NIGHTS

Evening. Eat alfresco under a Tropic of Cancer sky. Watch a floor show that features fire dancers, a steel band, (with a beat you can't resist), or an aqua show. Nassau's night-spots are alive, exhilarating—you won't get home till the small hours. Columbus discovered the Bahamas in 1492. This is your year. Discuss the winter holiday of a lifetime with your Travel Agent. He'll tell you how to get there, by air, or cruise there and fly back. HELP NEEDED

Multiple Sclerosis—the commonest organic disease of the central nervous system, frequently leading to progressive paralysis. In essence, the protective sheaths of the nerve fibres in the central nervous system are destroyed by some unknown agent. The resultant wasting away of these sheaths is followed by scarring or sclerosis of the nerve tracts.

Some 50,000 people in Gt. Britain suffer from Multiple Sclerosis. Its cause is still a mystery but it is known to be neither contagious nor hereditary. The average age of onset is 36—although often cases are encountered in the 'teens. Frequently it strikes when a man is establishing his career or a woman her home.

As yet, no satisfactory remedy has been found. The Multiple Sclerosis Society—of which there are over 100 branches—exists to promote the clinical and scientific research so essential if this mystery disease is to be conquered. The Society also promotes the welfare of those who have the disease.

You can help by voluntary service with your local branch or by a donation.

CHARTREUSE

Four hours ski-ing every day What will you do during the remaining twenty hours?

Everything! You are going to live. You are going to fill your lungs with good fresh air, to enjoy yourself, or to rest. You are certainly going to be happy — happier than you have ever been before during your vacation in the snow. Join us here in our home — your second home — in Switzerland on the Vaudois Alps.

A legend which is disappearing: "Switzerland is an expensive country". Come and see for yourself. You will find hotels from as little as £12 a week, room and board, taxes and service included—and you will be made welcome everywhere.

How to reach the Vaudois Alps? No problem. By plane to Geneva and the train to the Winter resort; or by car: even in thick snow the roads are open.

Ski-ing slopes made to measure! Long or short slopes, fast or easy ones. Slopes for the timid beginner as well as for the experienced skier. And of course, all kinds of ski-lifts, ski-cabines, ski-chairs and so on!

How to learn to ski? By following the lessons of the Swiss ski-ing schools. Every resort has one. Safe, simple and thorough, you will be wonderfully surprised to see how quickly you improve. You can even rent your equipment on the spot.

If you don't ski... don't feel abandoned. There is skating, sledging, sleigh-driving, horse-riding, curling and above all, long walks in the sun breathing the healthy air of the Alps... so many happy ways to pass the pleasant hours away and naturally—ski races, hockey matches, bridge matches, fancy dress balls, dances... and even the cinema, if you really can't go without!

In Switzerland,
the Winter-sports resorts of the Vaudois Alps are waiting for you!

TIO PEPE

WHY ONLY FIVE?

Is there a greater variety? Yes, but these are the main types. Left to Right FINO - AMONTILLADO - OLOROSO CREAM - BROWN—Generally, sherry becomes sweeter with colour.

Look for this label
